

DISCUSS ERECTION OF SHOP BUILDING

Pursuant to a call by President Truman Bentley, the high school board of education of the Jefferson Union high school district will meet in special session this evening at the Jefferson Union high school building at 7:30 o'clock.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the report of Mr. P. E. Dragon, of the firm of William A. Weeks, architect, regarding the plans for the new shop building for the local school.

For some time Mr. Andrew P. Hill, chief of the Division of School House Planning, of the State Department of Education, has been giving his personal attention to the development of the plans for the Jefferson Union high school's auto mechanics building. This has required not only consideration of the details of the building itself, but of its proper location on the grounds with respect to the present school building.

In forwarding to the board of education his recommendations last week, Mr. Hill made the following comment: "The scheme we have developed tries to place the shops in relation to your future building program; to leave room to extend; to permit of proper driveways across the campus; to permit of approaches to all departments in the building that need a delivery; and to permit utilization of the facilities you now have."

"The scheme is entirely open to criticism and is not a last word passed down from this office with the idea of its being arbitrary in any sense."

"I think, however, it shows one way of developing your school so that the buildings you erect now will have a sensible relation to future building problems. The position we suggest for the shop would allow the manual training room to be reached from the future second-story hallway."

The high school board expects to have work begun on the new building before the present school term ends, so that it will be ready for occupancy by the opening of school in August.

GASOLINE EXPLOSION BURNS THREE WOMEN

Painful burns were received by three women passengers on a street car near Colma last Sunday morning, when a can of gasoline, one of two cans left in the aisle by another passenger, overturned and became ignited. Two of the women, Mrs. Edward H. Hurlbut and Mrs. R. Saunders, wives of San Francisco newspapermen, were burned about the feet and legs. The other, Mrs. W. F. Benedict, wife of the assistant manager of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, received burns about the hands when she went to their aid.

The gasoline was overturned directly over the motors of the car, became ignited by a spark and flared up under the seat occupied by Mrs. Hurlbut and Mrs. Saunders.

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE PLAN SONG SERVICE FOR SUNDAY

The Calvary Mission Young People meet every Sunday evening at 6:40 at 4527 Mission street, and on Friday at 7 p. m. You are especially invited to come and visit us and listen in on our meetings. Next Sunday we will have as our topic "How to Become a Christian." We have a very lively song service, and you will enjoy hearing the young people talk and give their ideas as to how they think we ought to be and do things, and what they think is right. Besides the meetings, we have very good parties, hikes and weenie roasts, and last Sunday we broadcasted the meetings. But the best part of all is that we are all of one accord, we are all trying to live the Christ-like life. And then once every three months all the Baptist Young People of the bay region meet and have a good time, and have some eats and listen to one of our leaders talk. These are only a part of the things that you can enjoy by joining us. There are no fees or dues to pay. Come and visit us Sunday and see for yourself.

GENERAL PERSHING P. T. A.

The General Pershing Parent-Teachers' Association held its first regular meeting last Tuesday afternoon at the school. The association has made a wonderful start with fifty-eight charter members. It was most gratifying to see so many mothers and teachers ready for sincere co-operation, and under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Lillian Fletcher, and with the help of her officers and members, many wonderful accomplishments should be completed. A social whist party is to be held at the school on Tuesday, March 11. The score cards will be 25 cents, including refreshments. All members and their friends are invited to attend. An enjoyable time is planned for all.

CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION WILL FIGHT FOR RAVE

It is reported that a legal battle over the question of birth control in California awaits the appeal of Carl Rave, to be heard in Redwood City on March 14, in the Superior Court of San Mateo county.

Rave was arrested in Daly City for distributing a brochure on family limitation, written by Margaret Sanger. He was tried before Justice of the Peace Ellis C. Johnson in Daly City under an 1874 statute, charged with "wilfully and lewdly distributing obscene and indecent" writings. He was found guilty and sentenced to a $500 fine plus a three months' county jail sentence.

Attorney Austin Lewis, for the American Civil Liberties Union, will argue the appeal. The Union, Lewis explained, is not interested in birth control propaganda, but is interested in the right of free speech. Lewis pointed to the fact that recently Mrs. Sanger was in San Francisco, giving widely advertised and attended lectures on the subject. In England, he said, birth control advertisements are freely permitted.

Rave himself has been arrested four times for birth control propaganda activities. The first time was in Santa Rosa, the charge being violation of an ancient statute, and the district attorney refused to prosecute. The second time was in San Francisco for circulating "obscene" literature. He was convicted in Judge O'Brien's court but freed on appeal. The third time was in Santa Clara, where the lower court quashed its own proceeding.

DEATH CALLS PIONEER DALY CITY TRUSTEE

Frank B. Woodhouse, a pioneer of Daly City and former trustee, passed away at his home on Wellington avenue and Irvington street last Thursday morning.

Mr. Woodhouse was elected a city trustee of Daly City on April 10, 1916, serving the city four years, the first two years of which service he was president of the board.

He was the beloved husband of Frances E. Woodhouse. He was a member of Bethlehem Lodge No. 453, F. & A. M. Masonic funeral services will be held tomorrow (Saturday) morning.

MEMBER CANVASS AT GRACE CHURCH

Next Sunday is the initial day of the Every Member canvass at Grace Presbyterian church. It is exceedingly important that we have a full attendance at that time, and every family of the church be represented. Each and every member of the church and congregation should arrange their plans and make special effort to be on hand. If you have to choose between the morning and the evening service, choose the morning. The canvass will be officially started, and the pastor will preach an appropriate message.

All friends of the church, parents of Sunday school children, members of the Ladies' Aid, and others are urged to attend. The evening service is at 8 p. m. There will be special music. Sunday school at 10 a. m., Junior C. E. at 11 a. m., and Young Peoples' Christian Endeavor at 7 p. m. Boys' Pioneer Club meets Wednesday, 7 to 9:30 p. m.

Thursday evening, March 14, occurs the annual dinner and congregational meeting of the church. This is one of the big events of the year, and should be largely attended. The dinner is at 6:30 p. m., tickets being 50 cents and 25 cents. The congregational meeting will follow the dinner, and will include election of officers, reports for the past year on various activities of the church, and report of the Every Member canvass, and plans for the church services and supply of the pulpit for the ensuing church year. A cordial invitation is extended to all friends of the church and Sunday school to attend.

SEVEN SITES FOR AIR BASE BEFORE WAR DEPARTMENT

Seven definite offers of sites in the San Francisco bay region, including that of San Mateo county's on Brewer Island, for the proposed army air base and depot, are before the War Department officials in Washington, it has been learned by the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. C. B. Dodds, its representative, says that the war office is "displaying a genuine spirit of co-operation" in considering sites for the project. Major L. W. McIntosh, executive of the army air corps, has set forth to Congressmen Arthur M. Free the general requirements for an air depot in the bay region, resulting in the seven offers being forwarded to Washington.

Events in the Lives of Little Men

EDUCATION IN SCOTLAND SUBJECT OF ADDRESS

"Education in Scotland" was the subject of an interesting address delivered by Principal James Ferguson, of the Jefferson Union high school, on last Monday evening before the St. Andrews Society, meeting in Native Sons' Hall, San Francisco.

St. Andrews Society is composed of native sons and daughters of old Scotland and their descendants.

From the rapt attention given the speaker, it was evident that their interest in Scottish education is still keen.

Mr. Ferguson drew upon his experience in visiting the schools of Scotland as an official delegate from the United States three years ago and on a former occasion as a member of the Mosley Education Commission. Thus he was able to treat the subject from the point of view of recent educational developments, as observed personally by him, as well as that of the student of education who is familiar merely with the literature of the subject.

"Scotland's educational system," he said, "dates back to the fifth century, when the Celtic monks not only taught the people how to read and write, but also how to perform the tasks of agriculture and all the other industries in which the people engaged. Here we have industrial education organized upon a basis which was practical and efficient. Today Scotland stands in the front rank of nations in its scheme of industrial and technical education. For over a century Glasgow has had technical education in which the sciences and arts underlying industry have been taught. Here it was that James Watt added to the development of the steam engine, so that modern industrial development was revolutionized."

"Ask a Scotchman why there is practically no illiteracy in Scotland and you will probably be told that it is because Scotland has had compulsory education for centuries." Mr. Ferguson pointed out that while the first law on compulsory education in Scotland pertained only to the sons of barons and freeholders who could afford to educate their children, today compulsory education is universal up to the age of 14, and may be made 15 by local authorities, and even beyond that for two years, or even three years, attendance upon evening classes is compulsory 320 hours per year. "Even in California," said the speaker, "we have much to learn from Scotland, not only in what a compulsory education law should be, but in how it should be enforced. Scotland not only compels parents to send their children to school, but compels them to send their children to school regularly. No favoritism is shown. Any parent who keeps his child out of school is brought before a magistrate and fined. Playing truant or, as we call it here, 'cutting or playing hooky,' is unknown, because the parents are always held responsible."

The speaker said it was interesting to note that leaders of the Reformation in Scotland, such as Luther and John Knox, insisted upon compulsory attendance and universal education.

In comparing the school systems of California and Scotland, Mr. Ferguson called attention to the present effort in California to reduce the number of school boards, and to the action of Scotland by the law of 1918 whereby 947 local boards were reduced to 37.

"Of the contributions made to America by immigrants from the old world none stand higher in importance than those made by the Scotchman. Appreciation of education and the principles of Democracy were to them a sacred creed."

Mr. Ferguson commended the adoration of the Scotch people for their own literary men. He referred particularly to Stevenson and Scott and Burns. In closing, he recited Burns' song, "John Anderson, My Jo, John" as one of the finest ex-

P. G. & E. PLANS MANY SERVICE IMPROVEMENTS

The Pacific Gas and Electric Company's 1929 budget for additions and betterments to plant in the San Jose division calls for an expenditure of $2,008,652, according to announcement made by J. D. Kuster, division manager.

Among the major items of expenditure in the gas department are $50,000 for changes to provide for the utilization of natural gas, and $10,000 for a recirculating system at the plant; $60,000 for four miles of 8-inch pipe to bring natural gas to the plant, and another appropriation of $60,000 for main extensions for the taking on of new business. It is estimated that $30,000 will be necessary for the replacement of mains ahead of the street paving program in San Jose; $7,000 in Santa Clara; $10,000 in Los Gatos, and $3,500 in Sunnyvale. It is estimated that there will be 1,850 new services and 2,000 new meters installed, involving an expenditure of $67,900. In the Redwood district approximately $63,000 will be expended for the extension of mains to serve new consumers; $55,000 for the replacement and enlargement of mains in the east San Mateo territory; and $70,000 for the installation of 1,600 new services and meters.

In the electric department expenditures will be devoted mostly to the replacement of substation and line facilities and for additions to transmission and distribution lines for the taking on of new business. The sum of $58,000 is set aside for the rebuilding of the Davenport transmission lines from the Mt. View substation; $30,000 for increased installation on power lines on the peninsula to assure further continuity of service; $149,000 for one twin circuit steel tower line between Morgan Hill and a point near Gilroy; $93,790 for the installation of a substation at Meridian Corners; $75,000 for the reconstruction and rearrangement of lines on account of change in location of Southern Pacific depot; $85,000 for additional substation capacity at San Jose; and $48,000 for additional substation capacity at San Mateo.

CLOSE WELFARE HOMES AT BURBANK AND OAKLAND

Because the problem is "a family one" the child welfare homes maintained by the American Legion and its auxiliary at Burbank and at Oakland for the orphans of world war veterans have been closed, according to an announcement made by Dr. Henry G. Watters of Watsonville, chairman of the Legion's State Child Welfare Commission. In the future direct aid will be given when necessary to the case, supplementing family income, or to foster homes chosen by the two Auxiliary Child Welfare chairmen, Mrs. Elizabeth I. Drendell of San Francisco and Mrs. Martha Decker of Los Angeles.

The action of the Legion and the auxiliary was taken after an exhaustive investigation by the women and upon the recommendation of Dr. Watters, representing the Legion.

SAN FRANCISCO WOULD BUILD JAIL IN SAN MATEO COUNTY

San Mateo county supervisors may soon be asked to approve construction in San Mateo county of a branch jail for San Francisco county, if an enabling act which passed the assembly at Sacramento is voted by the senate. The site is still to be determined, but would be somewhere in the northern part of the county, San Francisco authorities declare. The act was introduced by Assemblyman James Guigley, San Francisco. Crowding of the Ingleside jail is given as the reason for seeking the San Mateo county site.

BIG BAY BRIDGE IS FORMALLY OPENED

The San Mateo-Hayward bridge, the longest highway bridge in the world, was formally opened to traffic last Saturday in the presence of thousands of spectators.

The formal opening of this bay bridge, which cost seven and a half million dollars, occurred at 3:30 p. m., when President Calvin Coolidge, in Washington, pressed an electric button. As the spark flashed its way over a 3,000 mile network of lines, the thousands of Californians gathered at either side of the bridge-head, two and a half miles off the San Mateo shore, set up a mighty shout. Overhead was a squadron of airplanes from the Ninety-first observation squadron of the army. Bands played "The Star Spangled Banner," while bridge employees raised the Stars and Stripes.

The public was permitted to use the bridge until midnight free of charge, and many thousands of the motorists took advantage of the opportunity of inspecting the mammoth structure.

The San Francisco Bay Toll Bridge Company, builders of the big span, was incorporated in 1927. It operates under a 50-year franchise granted by the county of San Mateo in September, 1927. Construction began on December 16, 1927. The contract with Raymond Concrete Pile Company, general contractors, provided for the completion of the structure on June 16, 1929. The completed bridge, however, was accepted on March 2, just 106 days ahead of schedule.

The San Francisco bay toll bridge, generally referred to as the San Mateo-Hayward bridge, is the longest highway bridge in the world, yet its total cost will not run beyond seven and a half million dollars. The length of the bridge from shore line to shore line is 7.1 miles.

Across the main ship channel, that runs north and south through San Francisco bay, there are four 300-foot fixed steel spans, with a central lift span of 303 feet of the well known Weddell design.

The remainder of the bridge between shores is of concrete viaduct construction, supported on the concrete piles driven to bedrock.

On the eastern shore a highway approach is constructed from the county crossroads, 1.2 miles southwest of Mt. Eden to the bridgehead, a distance of 1.75 miles. This approach is a 27-foot concrete pavement with a one and one-half foot rock shoulder on each side of the concrete. About three-quarters of a mile of this approach is constructed through salt ponds, the remainder being on high ground. On the west side a similar approach has been constructed from the corner of Third avenue and Bay Shore boulevard in the city of San Mateo, along the water front to the western bridgehead, a distance of three miles. A 500-foot concrete bridge was constructed at the crossing of Seal Creek.

At the site of the bridge proper the main ship channel is approximately one mile wide. The remainder of the crossing is over shoals with one to four feet of water at low tide. The center line of the bridge crosses the ship channel at right angles and then turns toward the Alameda shore. The concrete viaduct has 35-foot spans in the main channel and 30-foot spans across the shoals.

There has been a heavy traffic over the new bridge ever since the opening day.

ST. PATRICK'S CELEBRATION AT ST. MAXIMUS CHURCH

The opening number of the St. Patrick's day program given by St. Maximus church in the Daly City Auditorium, Saturday evening, March 16, will be rendered by the orchestra and will be a selection of Irish airs. Mr. M. McGregor will give a varied number of Irish and Scotch songs. Miss Frances Dougherty, an Orpheum star, will be the attraction of the evening in song and dance. Hayes and Egan will feature instrumental music. Irene Hanlon will dance. Harry Lindecker will impersonate various characters. Miss Cornelia Stanley will exemplify the traditional music of Ireland. Walter Unger will recite. An entertaining sextet will conclude the program with "The Day We Celebrate." Dancing will then begin and continue until midnight. Come early. Doors open at 7 p. m. The performance will start promptly at 8 p. m.

SENATE APPROVES SCHOOL BILL

By unanimous vote the state senate has passed Senator Herbert Slater's bill which codifies the entire school law of California. The work, covering two years of examination and study by a code commission, is described as a "monumental contribution toward simplifying and correlating the law regarding public school administration."

WILL CO-OPERATE ON BAY AREA PROBLEMS

In response to a request from the San Leandro chamber of commerce, the San Mateo county board of supervisors on Monday passed a resolution promising to co-operate with that city in problems affecting the bay area and announcing that it would be glad to attend a joint meeting of all the governing bodies of the bay district in the near future.

Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey suggested that this county might be able to offer suggestions to San Leandro in the matter of mosquito abatement, in that San Mateo county has successfully overcome the situation.

Chairman C. V. Thompson appointed Supervisors J. W. Poole and Rosalie M. Brown as a committee to meet with the South San Francisco city council and representatives from other city councils in the county to discuss the matter of uniform lighting for the Bay Shore boulevard. Supervisor Hickey declared that there may have to be some provision made by the legislature for the lighting of the roadway. "If the owners of the marshland are assessed for the lighting they will be paying for something from which they will get no benefit," declared Supervisor Hickey.

Opposition, in the form of a resolution, to the state legislative bill which provides that the state have complete supervision over highway patrol, was voiced by the supervisors Monday. Copies of the resolution will be forwarded to the boards of supervisors of every county in the state. The board opposed the bill on the grounds that if the bill were adopted there would be an additional expense to the county, in that there would have to be a separate squad employed by the county to handle traffic on the county roads.

Soft drink permits were granted to H. F. Owens of Oak Grove park near Menlo Park, Ernest M. Bradsten of Searsville Lake, M. I. Pears of Redwood City, E. Kerriek of Half Moon Bay and Nick Doukas of Colma. Hearing of the applications of Patrick H. O'Neill of Rockaway Beach, the Silver Fox Farm at Millbrae and Alexander Roland of Live Oak tavern will be held in two weeks.

Applications from Bertram Herring of Menlo Park, M. A. Hanoun of Daly City, H. Baumeister of Daly City and Edwin Maillard of San Mateo for the position of state traffic officer were received and filed.

COMMITTEE CHOSEN FOR SCHOOLS WEEK

The state wide committee that will have charge of the tenth annual celebration of public schools week, beginning on April 22, has been announced. The committee includes leaders in school work over the state and schools system.

Meetings will be held during the week in public school auditoriums and in public halls with the participation of Partin-Teacher Associations, commercial and civic organizations and county and state officials. The week is intended to be of a community nature in which the entire public are given an annual review of the work and progress in the school systems.

Charles Albert Adams of San Francisco is again named chairman of the general state committee and Vaughan MacCaughy, secretary. The state committee is divided into two sections, the northern and the southern.

Northern section Roy W. Cloud, secretary California Teachers' Association; Joseph Marr Gwinn, superintendent of schools, San Francisco; W. E. Given, superintendent of schools Oakland; Arthur H. Chamberlain, secretary, California Association for Education in Thrift and Conservation; Walter L. Bachrodt, Superintendent of Schools, San Jose; O. S. Hubbard, superintendent of schools, Fresno; George C. Jensen, principal, Senior High School, Sacramento; Wesley W. Kergan; Elias Ellison; and Will Crockett.

CALVARY MISSION GIRLS' CLASS TO HOLD FOOD SALE

Anxious to help, the girls of Calvary Mission have planned a food sale to be held Saturday, March 9. The proceeds will be used to pay for the piano in the primary department. That the girls know how to cook has been demonstrated many times in the past, so you will make no mistake if you buy your pastry, cakes and other good things for your Sunday dinner from them. This class has been growing rapidly, as have all the classes at Calvary. Our church school invites all children and adults to attend.

Church services were well attended last Sunday. The new Young Peoples' choir appeared for the first time Sunday evening.

Plans are under way to make Easter Sunday a red letter day in the history of this church. Plan now to attend.

YOUR BANK AND HOW TO USE IT

SAFE DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT

Safe Deposit, two very ordinary words that title a vast measure of interesting human history, also tell how well the average bank guards the valuables entrusted to its care. There is nothing safer than safe deposit.

A study of the safe deposit system in the modern bank quickly convinces the investigator that the mere act of placing valuables in a big concrete chamber with a door composed of several tons of impregnable steel, is only one feature of the safeguarding process, and perhaps not the most important feature at that. The protection of valuables once they are under lock and key is an elaborate process in itself.

In this bank the customer desiring safe deposit service is given a signature card to sign. On this he also answers a few questions regarding his birth and other vital facts so that he might be able to identify himself through means other than his signature. Then he is given two keys to the box he has selected and is shown the position of the box in the vault. After that, he is complete master of his safe deposit fortunes. He has all the keys that will actually open the box. If he loses them there is no way of getting into the receptacle by way of a key. In such an emergency an expert must be called and the door of the box must be drilled open in the presence of two of the bank's officers.

True, the vault attendant has a key, but that merely prepares the lock for the customer's key. Neither key used alone will open the receptacle. Therefore, both customer and attendant must be present when a box is taken from its niche. In the case of joint tenancy, that is where the keys are held by husband and wife or by partners, one or both parties may be present by agreement when the box is opened. In the event of the death of a joint tenant the bank must be given proof of such death and a representative of the State Controller's office must be present the first time the box is opened thereafter. This is to officially protect the interests of both the living and the dead.

Ordinarily a customer might figure that the precautions noted would be sufficient, but they are not enough for the bank. When a customer calls to open his box he is given a ticket by an attendant known as the verifying clerk. On this he writes his signature on record. The date and time of the visit are then stamped on the ticket and it is taken up by another attendant, who places it in the files of the department. Thus every call made by every customer to his box can be traced to the day and the minute.

In every instance when the right to open a box is disputed or is covered by a court order, attachment or legal action, a red seal is placed in the customer's keyhole. This seal, a long, thin strip of metal, prevents anyone from opening the box until it is removed by the manager of the department. When given the proper order he inserts another special key in the lock and draws the seal forth. This key will not open the box. It will merely release the seal. A red seal means that the box has been closed for some serious purpose. A white seal means that the box is closed for some minor reason, such as default of the periodical box rental.

Most of the precautions noted are taken also for valuables too bulky to go into a safe deposit box, such as suitcases, trunks and so forth. In some banks these valuables have a special vault of their own. Very often the articles left in storage in a bank's safe deposit vaults may be unvisited or untouched for years. Sometimes they are forgotten altogether. But the bank cares for them the same as it cares for the most valuable object or the most costly security. There are no grades or degrees to the protection offered by safe deposit.

TRAVEL DEPARTMENT

It may sound a bit fantastic to say that you can step into your bank, buy a ticket for a trip to London, Pernambuco or any other point, arrange all of your business, property or personal affairs so that you need not have a care as to how they will be handled while you are traveling, and then be on your way within a few hours or at most a few days. Every seasoned traveler knows how long it takes under ordinary circumstances to arrange trip details alone, particularly if he is going any distance. Add to this the details of transferring the administration of his material affairs to capable hands and it is easy to see that the preliminaries of any considerable journey might be drawn out over weeks and perhaps months, when the traveler is going "on his own."

The bank's travel department, particularly if it be the Bank of Italy, has contracted the whole business of travel arrangements and their related trust protection to the compass of a mere conference or two. In this period it is possible for the customer to buy all tickets—railroad, Pullman, steamer, airplane or motor, obtain letters of credit and travelers cheques, make hotel reservations, arrange for the care of his dependents and his property and the safe deposit of his valuables and obtain all information on passports and visas. This service can even go so far as to help him while away his idle hours by reserving theatre tickets at any point on his itinerary.

It is interesting to note that all of the service described here is as easy to obtain as it is to open a savings account. It is more interesting still to note that this service is without any extra charge whatsoever. There are no fees to be paid by the traveler or prospective traveler to the Travel Department.

The reader might ask: "Why should a bank establish a Travel Department?" A fair question, and easily answered. Travel entails many things that a bank is interested in. The issuing and circulating of letters of credit and travelers cheques, contacts with correspondent and other banks at home and abroad through the honoring of such drafts, the working up of contracts of value to the international banking and the foreign and domestic exchange departments, the interest of the trust department in caring for the affairs of the traveler while he is away and possibly thereafter, the care of valuables in safe deposit—all may be termed as direct banking business. In addition the Travel Department creates a vast fund of good will for the bank by concentrating all of the travel details, thus saving the client the necessity of going from one agency or transportation system to another. The creation of new business for the transportation companies and hotels also aids the bank.

It is easy to understand that the complexities involving a journey of any great distance, particularly the care of affairs at home while the traveler is away, and the many details that bewilder and even discourage the uninitiated in contemplating an unfamiliar trip, have acted to curtail travel. It is interesting to know that through the bank which maintains an up-to-date travel department, all of these negative factors can be swept away. Every detail of every trip, whether it be to Tibet or merely to the next state, can be arranged by the travel department, from the moment the traveler decides on the journey until he returns.

Any branch of the Bank of Italy's great system can provide this service, either directly or through the bank's nearest travel office. The experts in charge are themselves widely traveled. They know their field, which is the world, and the knowledge that they have gained and the service that they can give can be had for the asking.

EXCELLENT WEEK OF SPECIAL FEATURES AT DALY CITY THEATRE

Starting off a week that promises to be the largest in the history of the new Daly City Theatre, Dumbell with his Country Store and vaudeville artists will hold the top spot on the bill at this popular playhouse tonight, where he will offer his stage attraction and surprises. The picture play for tonight will be "Green Grass Widows," and has Walter Hagen, world's champion golfer, in the title role, supported by Johnny Harron and Gertrude Olmstead. It is a story of laughter and love, with many funny situations. Charley Chase will be on the same bill with "The Way of All Pants."

"STEAMBOAT BILL, JR."

For Saturday, Buster Keaton, Ernest Torrence and Mary Byron will hold forth in that screamingly humorous comedy special, "Steamboat Bill, Jr.," a side-splitter full of new laugh rousing gags and acrobatic thrills. On the same bill Bill Dooley will appear in "Gobs of Love." At the matinee chapter six of the serial thriller, "The Vanishing West," will be shown, together with candy for the kiddies.

MUSICAL COMEDY

For Sunday, playing continuously from 1:45 to 11, the Barnes Musical Comedy Company will appear with the Golden Poppy Girls in a new musical revue, together with Phyllis Haver and Wallace MacDonald in "Your Wife and Mine," a comedy on married life.

"FOUR SONS"

"Four Sons," called by many the biggest screen success in ten years, will be the headline attraction at the Daly City Theatre for Monday, when Margaret Mann, June Collyer, Charles Morton and a host of other players will appear in this gigantic super-special from the William Fox studios.

MORE SUPER-SPECIALS

Following closely on the heels of "Four Sons," the Daly City will present three more massive super-stories, John Barrymore in "The Tempest" being the attraction for Tuesday, together with the newly installed Scrip Book gift nite. This will be a regular Tuesday feature during the month of March. Wednesday's super-story will be Dolores Del Rio in her latest Fox studio story, "The Red Dance," a production abundant with thrills. Wednesday will also be Silk Pillow night. Thursday will bring "Dry Martini," a delightful story, with Mary Astor, Matt Moore, Jocelyn Lee and a host of other players. It is a sophisticated comedy romance of adventurous Americans in Gay Paree.

NOT "OLD FASHIONED"

The founders of two nationally known concerns were men of action. They gave to their product the best that was in them. They directed operations and when the line was ready, each season, they packed their trunks and went on the road.

Their successors were different. The seven new owners of each of these businesses first provided handsome incomes for themselves. They voted themselves fourteen salaries of $30,000 a year each, loaded their firms with more than $400,000 of non-productive overhead. It was non-productive for they took no active part. They hired production managers, raw material buyers, sales managers and salesmen, while they merely watched the wheels go round.

That non-productive overhead put on their products a cost so high that competitors found no difficulty in divorcing from the old concerns their oldest and most steadfast customers.

Then these men felt that the dignity of their position demanded they look the part. So each in turn got a foreign car. The crash followed.—Forbes Magazine.

In Reliability—60 miles an hour all day.

In Economy—better than 20 miles to the gallon.

IN THIS CITY under official newspaper observation, Essex the Challenger will demonstrate its right to challenge the best that motordom offers. It is dramatic revelation of an all round quality Six—big, fast, roomy, powerful—now available at the lowest price for which Essex ever sold and but little more than the cost of the smallest, lightest and lowest-priced cars on the market.

As you see it out-perform cars costing far more, remember that exactly the same performance ability, quality, economy and riding ease are characteristic in the Essex the Challenger which you buy.

And in Value—compare it part for part in every quality particular of appearance, finish, comfort and easy riding to those costly cars in which you pay the higher price for those very things.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

The Reflections of a Young Married Woman are not pleasant if she is delicate, run-down, or over-worked. She feels "played-out." Her smiles and good spirits have taken flight. It worries her husband as well as herself.

One woman says: "As a tonic to build a woman up when in a rundown state I do not know of any medicine that I consider so good as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Several times during the past when I would become weak, nervous and run-down I have taken the 'Favorite Prescription' and it proved to be an excellent tonic, very strengthening and also quieting to the nerves. I always recommend it to women whom I find ailing."—Mrs. Geo. Tylar, 6107 1/2 Avalon Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her."

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

METZLER FINALLY LANDS WITH SOX

Player Who Set Record for Touring U. S. Anchored.

When Alex Metzler joined the Chicago White Sox last spring he decided that this time he would stick to the major leagues.

Metzler had done enough traveling. He was tired of being shunted around the minor league loops.

His home is in Fresno, Calif., and Topeka offered him a contract in 1924. Metzler did not wait for transportation; he hopped a freight train and beat his way from Fresno to Kansas City.

He reported as an infielder but Topeka immediately shifted him to the outfield. He did not stay long. Topeka farmed him out to Coffeyville.

Coffeyville gave up the ghost and Metzler found himself a free agent with exactly eight dollars in his pockets.

He signed with Paris, Texas. Paris later sold him to Wichita Falls.

Metzler started the 1925 season with Wichita Falls, but they farmed him out to Ardmore and Ardmore had him for a few weeks when Wichita Falls recalled Metzler and shipped him to the Chicago Nationals. He played nine games with the Cubs and was sent back to Wichita Falls.

Wichita Falls did not need him so Metzler was loaned to Shreveport for one game. Wichita Falls recalled him, kept him ten days and then loaned him to Dallas for five weeks. At the end of five weeks Wichita Falls recalled him again.

Metzler went so well for Wichita Falls in 1926 that the Athletics bought him. He looked like a fine prospect, but when Philadelphia signed Ty Cobb and Zack Wheat the Athletics had so many outfielders that Cornelius McGillicuddy had to cut down and so he sent Metzler back to the Wichita Falls club.

He did not stay long in Wichita Falls. Chicago Americans, needing an outfielder to replace the injured Johnny Mostil, wired for Metzler and he has been with Chicago White Sox ever since.

Big Ed Morris in Queer Predicament in Sleeper

One of the southern papers tells a story about Big Ed Morris, the Boston Red Sox pitching star, when he reported to the Chattanooga club as a green rookie who didn't even know about trains. When the time approached for the first road trip Morris confided in one of his teammates that he was horrified at the thoughts of spending nights on any railroad train.

"I can't sleep in those seats," he said. "You have to draw up in a knot and your arm gets so twisted you can't pitch for days."

His friend explained to him about sleeping cars. He told him they had all the comforts of a hotel room and that he would sleep as he did at home. He seemed relieved.

When the train pulled into the station most of the players tossed their bags into the pullman and charged into the dining car. Morris, however, was more interested in the sleeping car.

He looked all around the car and asked the porter if he was in the ball club's sleeping car. When he was assured that the ball players were going to sleep in the car he rushed out to the diner and surged at his supposed friend.

"You lied to me, eh?" he shouted. "I wouldn't get on this train if you hadn't lied to me. You did lie. Don't tell me you didn't lie. I been all through that sleeping car and there ain't a d—n bed in it."

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Sacramento river run off this year will approach the low record year of 1924 unless unlooked for rains aid the flow to check salinity and swell irrigation reserves, Harold Conklin, chief of the State division of water rights, declared.

San Francisco will be the convention city for the purchase and stores division of the American Railway Association next June, the San Francisco Convention and Tourist Bureau announced. The purchasing agents of all the principal railroad systems and representatives of railroad supply manufacturers, who compose the organization, control the expenditure of more than $2,000,000,000 a year.

Official advices from Washington received by the Oakland Chamber of Commerce announced the selection of Oakland as a co-operative office of the United States Department of Commerce, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. W. K. Sempey, manager of the department of foreign and domestic commerce for the local chamber will be manager of the Government bureau, it was announced.

Bullfrog raising is developing into quite a business in Paradise, Paradise, as it happens, is a small town near Oroville and John Carrigan, resident there, is importing several hundred bullfrogs from New Orleans to form the nucleus for a frog farm. Ernesto Luna, 33, of Firebaugh, was always ready to do a fellow townsman a favor—that is until the following happened to him: It seems a "man from Phoenix, Ariz." wanted him to take $3500 to "Manuel Elias" at Firebaugh. It had been left him by an "aunt." Ernesto agreed, even to the extent of putting up $95 as guarantee of delivery. Police are hunting the man from Phoenix. There is no "Manuel Elias." The bundle of money proved a wet newspaper.

Saturday, May 18, has been decided upon as the date for the Fourth Annual Santa Clara County Fiesta de las Rosas to be held in the city of San Jose. As in the past this "festival of flowers" is to be featured by a grand floral parade of more than eighty floats of natural flowers and twenty-five of California's finest musical units. Viewed by 500,000 people last May it is expected that this spectacle of millions of flowers will attract an even larger throng to the State's first capital city. In addition to the floral pageant will be the great rose show conducted by the numerous flower lover clubs of the county and a festival of music to be participated in by more than 1000 high school students.

Annexing grand sweepstakes prizes in both the growers and packers divisions and winning a flock of firsts, seconds and thirds in the minor competitive departments, Riverside county citrus fruit swept the field at the National Orange show at San Bernardino. The National Orange Co. of Riverside captured the prize in Class 1 of Division A sweepstakes to which a prize of $200 is attached. The American Fruit Growers of Lindsay was second and the Mutual Orange Distributors of Corona third. The Circle City company took a prize of $100. The display judged was 40 boxes of Washington navel. Geo. C. Roiding of Lindsay, San Joaquin Valley, was crowned champion orange grower of the world and Ernest Mueller of Etiwanda took the title in the lemon culture.

The Division of Motor Vehicles accounted for its 1928 stewardship of the registration fees of California motorists by turning back to the State Highway Commission and the various counties a total of $7,820,621.19 collected in motor vehicle licenses to be used for highway repair and maintenance purposes. One half of this huge amount, or $3,910,310.59 will go directly to the highway commission. The other half will be apportioned to the counties after deductions totaling $751,144.65 are made for the salaries of traffic officers. This deduction will not be necessary next year if the legislature to create a state-wide traffic patrol is given approval as the officers will then be paid directly from operating funds instead of from county apportionments. The apportionment, largest in the history of the state, is a gain of $359,404.14 over 1927 and represents approximately 89 per cent of the total registration receipts. The division therefore used only about 11 per cent of the registration receipts for its operating expense although the law permits the use of 25 per cent. The apportionment of the counties is based on a total fee-paid registration for the year of 1,846,412 vehicles. The share each county receives is based on the number of vehicles it registered.

Vindication of the honor system in State hospitals, whereby inmates may spend the Christmas season with their loved ones, was seen in a report published recently by Leroy R. Bruce of the State Department of Institutions. Of the 851 feeble-minded and insane persons released from State hospitals and State homes during November, December, January and February, not one has failed to return on time, Bruce reported. In view of the fact that many of the inmates come from homes financially able to care for them, the result was considered particularly significant.

NICE WORDS WON'T DYE a dress or coat...

Neither pretty pictures nor colorful adjectives will dye a dress or coat. It takes real dyes to do the work; dyes made from true anilines.

Next time you have dyeing to do, try Diamond Dyes. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree they are better dyes.

You get none of that re-dyed look from Diamond Dyes; no streaking or spotting. Just fresh, crisp, bright new color. And watch the way they keep their brilliance through wear and washing. They are better dyes because they contain plenty of real anilines—from three to five times more than other dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. When you buy—remember this. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

New Plant Dye

A new natural plant dye has been discovered in species of cactus by Prof. H. Molisch, German chemist. This brick-red-carmine color has been named "cacto-rubin," and is produced when the cells of the cactus plant die. It is invisible in living cactus plants. It is thought that it may originate through some enzyme action.

OUR NEW PRESIDENT

Last Monday, Herbert Hoover, of California, was inaugurated president of these United States, while Senator Charles Curtis, of Kansas, took his place as vice-president and presiding officer of the Senate.

The ceremonies marking the inauguration of the first Californian chosen as president were as brilliant as any of the past. As seems usual in the national capital at this time of year, the weather was not at its best, those in the parade facing the discomfort of a rainstorm.

Thousands were in Washington for the inaugural ceremonies, while other thousands "listened in" over the radio. And probably the most interested listeners were Californians.

It seems a curious coincidence that California, which was the thirty-first state to enter the Union, has the honor of claiming the thirty-first president as a resident of this great state.

Herbert Hoover enters upon his duties as president of the United States with the full confidence of the people that he will measure up to the requirements of the office.

FREE SPEECH AND EQUAL RIGHTS

Free speech as guaranteed by the Constitution is a citizen's right, but it is not to be exercised when or where it infringes upon equal rights of other citizens. Such is the substance of a ruling by the Massachusetts Supreme Court in denying a Socialist soap-box orator's appeal from a fine imposed for obstructing a street in Lynn.

In his appeal the defendant claimed the right of the people to assemble in the streets and to make speeches therein. Chief Justice Riggs in his opinion said:

"By the location of a highway, an easement of passage is secured for the public with all incidental privileges thereby implied. Whatever interferes with the exercise of this easement is a nuisance. It is manifest that making a speech from a box and thereby gathering a standing crowd of people is an obstruction to the right of the public to use the highway for travel."

And soap-box orators are not the only persons who obstruct the streets and highways to the annoyance and inconvenience of the public.

GREATEST INDUSTRY

The world's greatest industry is not agriculture, railroads, steel, oil, nor automobiles, according to E. E. Calkins, the noted advertising expert. He says it is housekeeping—an activity that few would class as industry at all.

But upon reflection it would appear that he is right, because housekeeping touches the daily routine of every person in the world. Yet, perhaps less thought is given to how this great industry should be carried on economically and efficiently than is given to a dozen others which might be named.

In other industries every effort is exhausted to find better ways of doing things; to save time and labor; to secure the best results with a minimum of waste and lost motion. Even the farmer is becoming alert to adopt better machinery and improved methods generally in connection with his farming operations.

Still, men who demand the latest and best equipment for their farms, offices and factories are often very slow in furnishing their homes with appliances which would lessen the housewife's labor and make her life more pleasant.

It might be well to think of this the next time the good wife suggests the installation of some labor-saving device which would not only save her strength, but would be a real economy in the long run. Our greatest industry should have more consideration.

AN ACE AND A MEDAL

Drawing a line between two classes of heroes caused a controversy in Congress where friends and admirers of Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, America's foremost war ace, were trying to bestow upon him the Congressional Medal of Honor, while the War Department objected.

This medal may be conferred only upon one who in actual combat with the enemy shall distinguish himself conspicuously by gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life, "above and beyond the call of duty."

The present controversy hinges upon the interpretation of the last phrase quoted. Rickenbacker shot down twenty-six German airplanes during the war. The particular exploit for which he is sought to be awarded the Congressional Medal is described in the following citation:

"While on voluntary lone patrol over the lines Captain Rickenbacker attacked seven enemy planes. Disregarding the odds against him, he dived on them, shot one Fokker down out of control, also shot down one Halberstadt, and routed the remaining planes of the group."

Secretary of War Davis thinks Rickenbacker only performed his duty. A good many Congressmen think he went beyond it. To our mind it is stretching duty pretty far to make it cover the attacking of seven airplanes by one lone aviator. We would give Rickenbacker the medal.

LESSENING A HORROR

Recent successful tests at Key West have demonstrated that under favorable conditions men trapped in a sunken submarine may escape by means of new life-saving devices.

The submarine S-4, in which forty-three men perished in December, 1927, was used for the tests, after having been repaired and fitted with a newly invented "escape hatch." Two naval officers, each wearing an oxygen charged "lung" of new design, made their way safely to the surface from depths ranging from 40 to 120 feet, the latter depth being that to which the S-4 was submerged after its fatal collision fourteen months ago.

Important as the new devices are, they by no means insure the safety of submarine crews in case of accident, but they do lessen the danger of being trapped under water to a certain extent, and thereby should be beneficial to the morale of submarine force.

But the submarine will continue to be a death-trap for many brave sailors. Its horror has been lessened, but not eliminated.

TWO RAILROAD MEN

Back in the early '90s two boys were holding down their first railroad jobs in the West. Paul Shoup was a clerk in a Santa Fe office; Joseph H. Dyer was a section laborer on the Southern Pacific. They have been "working on the railroad" ever since, but not, as the old song goes, "just to pass the time away."

Shoup became a telegraph operator, going to the Southern Pacific, then assistant general passenger agent, and so on. Dyer was promoted to freight conductor, yardmaster and other more responsible offices in turn. Probably neither knew just where he was going, but both were on their way. A few weeks ago Paul Shoup became president and Joseph H. Dyer vice-president of the entire Southern Pacific system.

There is a lesson in this little story for any young man who can see it.

RECIPE FOR LONG LIFE

It is quite the custom to interview aged persons of prominence on their birthdays, and an inevitable question put to them is, "What is the secret of your long life?" This was asked of John E. Andrus, multi-millionaire manufacturer of Yonkers, N. Y., a few days ago on his eighty-eighth birthday, and he replied:

"My recipe for a long life and happiness is a clear conscience, simple diet, plenty of sleep, ample work, and playing the game straight with everybody. Fifty persons out of every hundred do not give their health a thought. Too many folks overload their stomachs."

There isn't anything strange or hard to understand about that, still it just about sums up all that can be said on the subject. In keeping well, as in most other things, there is no lack of knowledge of what to do—the difficulty lies in doing it.

An automobile expert believes that cars will soon be run by radio. Just add an attachment that will inflate a flat tire and we are sold.

During the hot stove season baseball players may get a little extra publicity by posing as hold-outs for a few days.

Colma News Notes

Miss Olga Ottoboni, of Lawndale, entertained at tea given in honor of Duchess Vittori Colonna Simonetta of Italy.

Mr. and Mrs. V. Rossi and family motored to Palo Alto last Sunday, where they were guests at the home of Rob Silva.

Don Funge, of Sacramento, the famous cattle dealer, formerly of Colma, has been a visitor here for the past week.

The Anchor Drug Company will open their new store this Saturday. The building has been remodeled into a first class drug store.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Zanetti and daughter Lois and Mr. and Mrs. E. Barsi and son Nello motored over the new San Francisco bay bridge last Sunday, returning by way of the Dumbarton bridge.

Bennie Picetti has been on the sick list the past week, suffering from a severe cold.

The Colma Community Center held their monthly whist party last Saturday evening at their club rooms on Dunk street.

Mr. F. Bottaro, of Sacramento, was a visitor at the B. Ottoboni home. Mr. Bottaro left on the steamer Chenu Maru for the Orient.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bianucci, of San Pedro avenue, are the proud possessors of a new Nash, purchased during the past week.

J. H. Cropley last week purchased a Chevrolet coupe, the sale being made by James Syme, of the Daly City Chevrolet agency.

The Colma Volunteer Fire Department will hold a whist party this Saturday evening, March 9, at Jefferson Hall, on San Pedro avenue. Score cards 25 cents.

Mrs. William Nassino and baby son, of San Francisco, were visitors at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Silicani, of Bryant street, during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. George L. Lagomarsino and family, Mrs. H. Lorenz and daughters Helen and Alice enjoyed a motor trip over the new San Francisco bay bridge last Sunday.

Mrs. Paul Lanthberry and baby daughter, of Menlo Park, who are visiting in Colma, will be the house guests of Miss Louise Kempfen, of Annie and Washington streets, for several weeks.

The friends of Edna Lazzari, oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Antone Lazzari, of Hillside boulevard, are happy to hear she was able to return to school on last Monday after several weeks of illness.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Ficher and daughter Sylvia, Bennie Haubrich, Mrs. J. Fischer and daughters Marion and Katherine motored to Palo Alto last Sunday in the Fischer's new Jordan De Lux sedan, where they visited Mr. Rob Silva.

Colma and Daly City were well represented last Saturday evening at the dance and party given at the State Armory, on Mission and Fourteenth streets, San Francisco, by the Third Combat Train No. 250, Coast Artillery.

George Wright, of Washington and Hill streets, who has been connected with the Colma Vegetable Association, has been appointed the new roadmaster of District No. 1, under Supervisor Thomas L. Hickey. Mr. Wright, who is well known and has many friends who wish him much success, started to work in his new position on March 1. Ray Greene, of Washington and Bryant streets, accepted the position left vacant by Mr. Wright, with the Colma Vegetable Association, and started work in his new position on March 1.

Ray Silicani, Lester Ver Linden, Herman Lorenz, Joe Silicani and Louis Guisti motored to Mussel rock on last Sunday and enjoyed the day fishing.

Mrs. Mabel Martinelli entertained a group of friends at luncheon last Thursday, having as her guests Miss Gladys Callan, Miss Tuddie Silicani, and Mrs. Lillian Gianni.

Tessie O'Connor, Audrey Diamond and Roberta Heagney had a most enjoyable week end at Tahoe. They were guests of the Southern Pacific Company on their annual excursion.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Wall were among the many guests last Saturday evening at a surprise birthday party given at the home of Mrs. Wettstein on Brunswick street in honor of her husband.

The next regular meeting of the drill team of El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, Native Daughters of the Golden West, will be held on Friday evening, March 15, at 8 o'clock. Miss Diamond, major of the team, is very pleased with the showing the girls are making.

Don't forget the sport dance to be held by the members of La Fiesta Social Club, Saturday evening, April 13, at George Washington Temple, Masonic Hall, San Juan and Santa Rosa avenues. A good time is assured all, as the members are working hard to make this affair a success.

A whist party is to be held at the Salada Beach school house on Saturday evening, March 23, and it is expected that a number of Colma residents will be present. The committee in charge of the whist will be Mesdames F. Chambers, G. Strei, T. Van Hook, F. Hallin, M. O. Anderson and W. Freyer.

A large group of friends from Colma motored to Rockaway Beach last Sunday and enjoyed a delicious barbecued dinner as well as a delightful day on the beach. Those in the party were Mr. and Mrs. Jack Callan and son Robert, Miss Gladys Callan, Mrs. L. S. Marinelli and son Billie, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Fahey and children, Thomas, Jr., and Dorothy, Mr. and Mrs. W. Faulbush and daughters June and Patsy, Miss Juanita Silicani, Miss Tuddie Silicani, Frank Berganti and Frank Eserini.

The Girls' Club of Colma are making extensive preparations for their big 1929 whist party and dance, which will take place on Saturday evening, April 20, at the Colma Community Center on Dunk street. Music for dancing will be furnished by Julius Schindler, who is very well known. Refreshments will be served. The funds are to be used for subscriptions to magazines for the invalid soldiers at the U. S. Base hospital at Palo Alto. Keep the date in mind and remember a good time is awaiting everybody, as the Girls' Club of Colma are famous for their hospitality.

Last Friday evening the members of La Fiesta Club were entertained at the home of Miss Edna Boyle, on Brunswick street, assisted by Miss Louise Clemens. Final arrangements were made for the club's anniversary dinner party. The club also made plans for their sport dance to be held on April 13. After the regular business meeting dainty refreshments were served by the hostess. Those having a most enjoyable evening were Audrey Diamond, Tess O'Connor, Laura Figone, Marge O'Connor, Nora Healey, Sylvia Fischer, Lorraine Wall, Elsie Fahey, Christine Hume, Marge Kennedy, Florence Hopman, Roberta Heagney, Louise Clemens and Edna Boyle. During the evening Miss Figone rendered several songs for the members.

LOCAL ESSEX DEALERS TO PUT CAR TO TEST

Backing the militant Essex slogan to the limit, the National Auto Company, Hudson-Essex dealers, will next week stage an "Essex Challenge Week," during which Essex the Challenger models will be submitted to every conceivable test.

The outstanding test will be speed and easy riding, which will take place at the National Auto Company in Colma on March 12, with A. J. Bertini and Bert Clark acting as judges. The National Automobile Company invites all motorists to attend and view the test.

This is part of a national "Essex Challenge Week," in which every dealer of the vast Hudson-Essex organization will take part.

The "Challenge" slogan was first conceived when test after test revealed that the 1929 Essex, with 76 improvements, was matching much more costly cars on every count, says the National Auto Company, local dealers.

In speed, performance, easy riding, fast get-away, quick and certain braking and gasoline consumption, the new car so astonished dealers and distributors who had gathered at the factory in Detroit for private showings and demonstrations, that one distributor enthusiastically remarked that the new Essex could challenge anything. Thus the militant title "Essex the Challenger" was born.

Following the introduction of the car, a system of balloting was introduced whereby every prospect, following an examination of the car and a demonstration run, was invited to vote. The ballot was not a blanket ballot but one upon which every voter had an opportunity to single out his likes and dislikes and vote as he or she wished. No signature was necessary and the ballots were cast in a sealed box.

Upwards of half a million votes have been cast—and, the factory reports, only a few are negative, and they were more constructively critical on minor points than anything else.

Now, during Essex Challenge Week, the general public will be given an opportunity to judge for itself how well justified in the Challenger slogan. The National Auto Company even goes so far as to invite suggestions as to which tests the car be subjected. If they are within the bounds of reason, they will be accepted, for, it is asserted, "Essex the Challenger" will do everything the most costly car can do.

Essex sales for January established a new high record for the month, a Detroit dispatch states, and the factory is now on a schedule which calls for 37,000 cars this month, another new record.

The municipal court jury at Los Angeles trying the Rev. Robert Shuler for criminal libel in connection with the alleged malicious publication of a spurious Knights of Columbus oath was unable to agree and has been discharged.

The RED LAMP

"He then said 'Jane, Jane,' in an agonized voice, and as my name is not Jane there was some amusement, especially when he added: 'She is asleep. I cannot rouse her.' Almost immediately after that, however, he said 'Robinson's point,' and something about a boat there. (We think now that the allusion may have been to the lighthouse you mention.) After that he was quiet for a time and I begged to be allowed to wake him, but just as we had turned on the lights again he got up, with his eyes still closed, and leaning over the table, seemed to be staring at the gentleman across from him. (A Mr. Lewis, a very nice man, with whom my husband plays golf a great deal.)

"I have not changed my attitude, he said, in a really terrible voice. 'I repudiate you and all your works. I am not afraid of you. The thing is monstrous, and society should be warned against you.'

"I have forgotten to say that he had kept his right hand closed, as though he had something in it. He made a gesture as though he threw this something away, and then looked at Mr. Lewis again and said: 'I have warned you; I shall tell the police.'

"He seemed to be in a state of great excitement, and hardly able to breathe. He fell back into the chair, and our doctor friend reached over and felt his pulse. He says now that, although his heart is perfectly sound, it had almost stopped. Indeed, he would have fallen had the doctor not caught him. In a short time he came around and seemed to think he had been asleep. He felt, however, very wretched the next day.

"This may not interest you, but the mention of Robinson's point in your article, and the similarity in time, has struck me as a strange coincidence. I am signing this in full, as an evidence of good faith, but I must ask you not to use it for publication."

(Note: I have since secured the writer's consent to the use of this letter, on condition that I withhold the signature.)

August 17.

One lives and learns. Mr. Bethel telephoned me at nine o'clock last night, the first time I have known him to use the telephone, and asked me to see him.

(Note: I have, I think, not mentioned in the Journal that the three buildings, the Lodge, main house and bathhouse, are on one telephone. As this fact plays an important part later, it requires explanation.)

I found him alone in the library, but with certain changes from the last time I had seen him thus. The windows were closed and locked, and the heavy curtains drawn across them; both the rear and front doors in the hall were bolted, and when I was finally obliged to ring, I could hear the old man dragging himself slowly into the hall and there stopping.

"Who is it?" he called.

"Porter."

I was on the terrace, and he opened that door for me, working laboriously with his single useful hand. Once inside, he left me to close it for myself, and went back into the library. When I followed him it was to find him seated with a revolver close at hand as before.

"I don't like your house, Mr. Porter," he barked at me, without preliminary.

"I don't like it myself," I admitted. "I am thinking of adding to the insurance and then setting a match to it. After you are out, of course," I added.

That brought a sort of dry chuckle from him, but the next moment he was back to the attack. He supposed he was responsible for the balance of the rent, but wasn't I morally responsible if he couldn't live there? I had known the stories about the house, and yet had let it to him. There was a question there.

"There is no question," I said. "I have no idea of holding you up for the balance of the rent."

It seemed to me, however, that he hardly heard me. He was listening again, as he had before, and when he spoke it was on a totally different matter.

"You find me rather on guard," he said. "I am alone in the house."

"Where's Gordon?"

"He went into the city this morning. He has not come back."

And there was something in the way he made the statement that caused me to look at him quickly.

"You mean that he has gone for good?"

"No. I wish to God he had."

There was fear in that, and I realized then that all the place showed fear, the locked and bolted house, the dim light—only one lamp going, and that on the desk—the revolver, and the old man's twisted body, crouched and watchful.

"I am afraid of him, Mr. Porter," he said. "I think he means to kill me."

"Can't you get rid of him?"

"Don't you suppose I've tried?"

His story, if story it can be called, that rambling discourse broken into by his fits of listening, even once of sending me out to take a look around, is as follows:

He had picked the boy up in the city, knowing little or nothing about him, and from the time they arrived he had not quite trusted him. After a time, too, he began to suspect that he was getting out of the house at night, and possibly using the car.

"Not guilty in itself, perhaps," he said, "but it left me alone, for one thing. And it is not a house in which one cares to be alone." He glanced at me. "And for another—well, I needn't tell you what has been going on."

But he was not, at first, really suspicious of these night excursions, save for his resentment at being left there, alone and helpless, with a killer loose in the neighborhood. He kept a watch, therefore, not so much over the boy as over the house and himself in his absence.

"If he left a door or window open," he said, "I was at the mercy of anybody who chose to enter."

And this, he says, was the situation on the night of the 26th of July. He had gone to the boy's room and found it empty, and had after some debate decided to work his way downstairs and lock him out.

"And myself in," he said.

It took him a long time to do it; he says, too, that he was very nervous; there were sounds, especially in the dining room. Nothing he could account for, but they upset him still further, and by the time he reached the kitchen he was in a bad way. He had to sit down there.

It was while he was sitting there that he heard sounds on the porch and somebody at the door knob. From that on he says he was beyond coherent thinking, but he had no doubt in the world, because of the stealthiness of the movement, that the thing he had feared was happening. It seems never to have occurred to him that it was Gordon.

He dragged himself to the stove, found the poker, and as the door opened struck with all his strength.

"It was only when he made a leap for the bell that I knew what I had done."

He was stricken. He felt the boy's pulse and knew he was not dead, but off somewhere near the sun-dial he heard some one moving, and that alarmed him still more.

"A man never knows his cowardice," he said wryly, "until he is put to the test. I have very little idea of what I did next; my only clear recollection is of finding myself in my room. I don't remember getting there."

But—and this is the point—the boy suspected him. He was sure of it. There had been a complete change in his attitude since that time. And watching that change, studying Gordon as he had felt obliged to, he had felt that something underlay all this. In other words, gradually he had begun to associate the boy with the other crimes.

"He is weak," he said, "weak and vicious. And there is that curious state called identification; the weak see the crimes committed by the strong, admire them, admire the criminal. Then they begin to ape them as Gordon may have aped your sheep-killer, finally even identifying himself with this unknown, adopting his symbol, or whatever one chooses to call it."

I listened carefully, trying to fit this new light on Gordon's injury with the evidence as I knew it. True, the weak link in our chain against him had been that he himself had been attacked. And this was now solved in a perfectly matter-of-fact manner. But there was some discrepancy, something which eluded me until I had gone over in my mind the events of the night of the 26th in their sequence. Then I found it.

"But what about the man the boy saw enter by the gun-room window?"

"Pure invention, I feel certain. Had he accused me he knew the matter of his night excursions would come out. That was the last thing he wanted."

It was my next remark, however, which has left us, as I wrote at the beginning of this entry, just where we were before.

"You haven't said anything about the rope, Mr. Bethel. That has a way."

"Rope?" he said slowly. "What rope?"

"He was tied hand and foot when I found him."

He glanced at me, and then down at his helpless hand.

"It's a very long time since I have been able to tie a rope, Mr. Porter," he said quietly.

I remained with him until an hour or so after the last train from the city had arrived, but there was no sign of Gordon. I offered to remain for the night with him, but he declined. He would not go to bed, however, and I left him there at last, his revolver within reach.

Of that later talk there is one matter of real importance to record.

I have a strange picture in my mind, bearing on the relations of these two, the old man and the boy, and leading up to it; each watching the other, the old man terrified, the boy deadly. And on the surface, before Annie Cochran, all well enough between them; dictation taken, and the book growing. Small surface differences, perhaps, but underneath suspicion on one side and revenge and hatred on the other.

Then Gordon took to locking his room. It was Annie Cochran who told Bethel, and from that time on that locked room played its own part between them; the old man asking himself what was hidden in it, the secretary with his sneering smile quietly carrying the key. It grew, I gathered, to have a peculiar place in the old man's imagination; he wandered down the passage to it more than once; finally Annie Cochran caught him there, trying the knob, and he had made some excuse and gone away.

But the night young Gordon lunged out of the house, the same night I saw the figure at the foot of the stairs, Annie Cochran had come to him before leaving, with a key in her hand.

"I thought you might like this, sir," she said. "I find it fits Mr. Gordon's door."

Then she had gone, and he went to the room and entered. The knife and the rope were there, and he took them.

"What was I to say that night, when the constable came down and reported nothing there? In ten minutes, or an hour, you were going to leave me here with him. He was watching me; he knew."

And I daresay he was right. No matter what statement had been made relative to the rope and the knife, there was no reason for Gordon's arrest that night. In ten minutes, or an hour, they would have been left together, and who knows what might have happened?

August 18.

Gordon came back early this morning. I invented an errand to the house soon after breakfast, but found that Mr. Bethel was still sleeping—as well he might—and that preparations for tomorrow's departure were well under way.

While Gordon was busy on the lower floor, Thomas and I made a tour of the house, with a view to closing it. I took advantage of my legitimate presence on the upper floor to examine the locked closet in which I had stored the red lamp. It is still there, and apparently has not been disturbed.

Halliday today advised for me a period of masterly inactivity. Not that he calls it so, but that is what he means.

"I have an idea, Skipper," he said, "that this calling Greenough off the case was sheer bluff. Every move he made was being watched, and unless I miss my guess you'll find he's at Bass Cove, or some place nearby, under another name. I thought I saw his car a night or so ago."

What I finally gathered is that Halliday wants to eliminate me from the case, for my own sake.

"Just now," he said, "you are sitting very pretty. But one more bit of bad luck and he's ready to jump."

Grateful to Friend for Deserved Rebuke

James Stillman, who for several years was one of the Titans of Wall street, sat in his office one day talking with a business man who had called, when it developed that some error had been made in Stillman's bank. An official was summoned and Stillman, without moving or raising his quiet voice, berated the offender in terms so harsh, with an irony so coldly insulting, and concluded in such a savage intensity of speech, that the unfortunate man trembled and beads of perspiration stood out upon his forehead. When the culprit had been dismissed, the horrified visitor spoke:

"Stillman, I never in all my life heard anything so outrageous! That man holds an important position in the bank and you have insulted him before a stranger. Why—I shouldn't be surprised if he put a knife into you! A man has no right to treat another so, nor to let himself go like that. The most charitable thing I can think is that you are on the verge of a nervous breakdown and that you have no business to be in your office!"

Stillman heard this outburst in a white silence, his powerful face a very mask of rage. The visitor waited a few moments, then picked up his hat and went out.

Sometime later the visitor received a card inviting him to a function at the Stillman home. He and his wife

Although he smiled, I have an idea that he is deadly serious; that he knows Greenough is not far away, and that for some unknown reason he expects another bit of bad luck. His face is thin and haggard these days, and from the fact that he sleeps a great deal in the daytime, I am inclined to think that he sleeps very little at night.

Between him and Edith too, I surmise some sort of mysterious understanding. At the same time, there is a noticeable absence of those three-angled conferences in which, some little time ago, we were free to air our various theories.

Willy nilly, I am consigned to innoxious desuetude.

Hayward started yesterday on his vacation.

August 20.

4:00 a. m. Mr. Bethel was murdered between eleven o'clock and midnight last night. Gordon has escaped.

7:00 a. m. Jane is at last asleep, and I have had some coffee. Perhaps if I record the events of the night it will quiet me. After all, one cannot forget such things; the only possible course is to bring them to the surface, to face them.

But I will not face that room.

Murder. The very word is evil. But no one has ever known how evil until he has seen it. Such things cannot be written; they should not be seen. They should not be.

We have had this murder. We have gone over, inch by inch, the scene of it. We have been spared no shock; the evidence of the struggle is on the walls, the floor, the furniture; we have the very knife with which it was committed. We have even gone further than that. We have followed it outside, along the drive to the garage, and from there by the car to the salt marsh beyond Robinson's point.

And yet, according to Halliday, until we have gone still further, we have had no murder, according to the law.

Ever since daylight, I have been struggling to see the justice of a law where, when Gordon is found—and Greenough believes he will be found—we cannot convict him unless we also find that bit of old flesh and blood and bone which was once Simon Bethel.

Is it only necessary, to escape justice, that a criminal artfully dispose of his crime?

And by how narrow a margin he did escape it! A matter of minutes. Between my calling Halliday on the telephone and my meeting him at the terrace; perhaps even between that and our entrance into that wrecked room. A matter of minutes.

In one thing only, did he make an error, and even that may not have been an error. He may coolly have abandoned his suitcase, packed and hidden in the shrubbery; may have stood there a second or so, considering it, and then decided to let it lie.

The most grievous thing to me is that I should have given him the warning. And the most terrible picture I have is that, when I called Halliday, he stood listening in at the telephone, craftily calculating: "Can I make it? Can I not?" With that behind him.

Crafty. As old in crime as crime is old, for all his youth. Out on the bay disposing of his horrible freight, and watching the lanterns as they searched for the boat; seeing them scatter, looking for other boats with which to follow him out onto the water, and then quietly heading back, into the creek again, and escaping through the wood.

Crafty, beyond words.

August 21.

The excitement is still intense. I have hardly seen Halliday since our trouble; he is working with the police, of which a number have come to assist Greenough. Curious crowds stand outside our gates, which we have been obliged to close and lock. A few of the more adventurous, gaining admission by the lane, are turned back there by guards who are on duty day and night.

Thomas, standing at the gate, has orders to admit only the detectives and duly accredited members of the press.

On the bay we have once more the familiar crowd of searching boats. Off the Point, dragging has been going on, but with no result. Owing to the fact that no guards were placed by the boat, a large portion of it has already been taken away by morbid individuals who will place their trophies, I daresay, on tables or mantelpieces, and thereafter gloat over them.

Truly, just as the lunatic always insists that he is sane, so do the sane often demonstrate that they are mad. And so far, nothing.

Nothing, that is, which leads to Gordon's apprehension. From the time he turned back in the boat and landing, made his escape into the woods above Robinson's point, he disappeared entirely. Here and there a clew has turned up, to end in disappointment. Greenough believes that he will be found, that he cannot escape the police drag-net, but I am not so sure.

Although almost forty-eight hours have passed since Jane, has not yet opened up the subject of the telephone, and because of her morbid reserve on such matters, I have not told the police.

Asked how I had happened to be at the telephone and thus receive the alarm, I have replied that the bell rang, that I went to the instrument, and was immediately aware that one of the receivers was down, either at Halliday's or at the main house; that I heard a crash over the wire, followed by a second and nearer one, and after that a silence; that following that I heard, near the receiver, the sobbing breath of exhaustion, and that immediately after that the receiver went up, and I called Halliday frantically; and that, on his replying, I told him my suspicion that something was wrong at the main house, and to meet me there at once.

But there is a discrepancy here which may cause me trouble if they come back to it. A telephone such as ours does not ring if one of the receivers is down. And the plain fact is that our telephone did not ring at all that night.

As I have not yet recorded the events of that tragic evening in their sequence, I shall do so now.

Halliday had dined with us, and had been more like himself than for some time past. After dinner he and Edith sat on the veranda, and going to lower a shade I saw that she was holding a match while he drew something on a bit of paper. But the match went out almost at once, and I would have thought so more of it, had I not heard Edith say:

"And the cabinet was there?"

"In the corner," he replied.

I am no eavesdropper, so I drew the shade and turned away.

He left at something after ten, and Edith joined us. She was very quiet, and sat watching me play solitaire while Jane sewed industriously. At half past ten or thereabouts, Jane suddenly said:

"The telephone is ringing."

Both Edith and I looked up in amazement; the instrument was in the small hall, not ten feet from where I sat; it would have been impossible for it to ring without our hearing it, and we had heard nothing.

"You've been asleep, Jane!" Edith accused her. But I glanced at her, and I remember that she was oddly relaxed in her chair; her face looked white and her eyes were slightly fixed.

"It is ringing," she said, thickly.

And that is how I happened to be at the telephone that night. And how, too, I gave the alarm which enabled the murderer to escape, by calling Halliday.

"Get your revolver and meet me at the main house," I said. "There's something wrong there."

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS
ON AUTOMOBILES ALLOWED

In making out income tax returns, motorists should bear in mind that there are a number of deductions from gross income allowed on account of ownership and operation of an automobile, according to the legal department of the California State Automobile Association. However, the state gasoline tax is not deductible since it is a "distributors' tax." Allowable deductions are:

All sums paid during the calendar year in the form of registration fees, drivers' licenses, county personal property taxes and municipal taxes paid on the automobile.

Interest on money borrowed for the purchase of an automobile, irrespective of whether the car is used for business purposes or for pleasure.

If a passenger car is used wholly for business purposes, all expenses incident to maintenance, including depreciation at the rate of 20 per cent per annum, may be deducted. Where the car is used partly for business and partly for pleasure, the expense may be deducted on a pro rata basis.

Loss sustained by reason of damage to a passenger automobile while being used for pleasure is deductible. The loss, however, must be an actual loss to the person claiming the deduction. If it is compensated for by insurance or otherwise, is not deductible.

Where a motorist paid damages for injury to a pedestrian, such amount is deductible, provided at the time the injury occurred the car was being used for business.

The amount paid for insurance on automobiles used for business purposes and the amount of finance charges on a car which covers interest and risk on the loan, but not the amount covering the premium on insurance to protect the finance company's interest.

Loss when sustained where an automobile used for business purposes is traded in for a new car may be deducted.

The Automobile Association points out that in no case is a loss deductible where it is sustained when an automobile used for pleasure is traded in for a new car. In no case is the amount paid for an automobile used for either business or pleasure allowed as a deduction. This is regarded as a capital investment, but is subject to claim for depreciation when used for business purposes. In the case of purchase by a farmer for strictly farm use, only the expense incident to operation is deductible, as in the case of any other business or professional use.

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, operating in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, plans to spend the sum of $7,000,000 on extending long distance lines during 1929.

After an exhaustive survey by civic experts it has been found that what Chicago needs is "better public officials." Aren't those experts wonderful?

The Federal Radio Commission reports a vast accumulation of "fan" mail, which it wants to destroy. It probably includes a lot of "pan" mail.

Prince Nikita, in exile in Paris, is said to aspire to become czar of Russia. We recommend that he try remote control as a starter.

SIDELIGHTS

Because a recent issue of "The Rammer Jammer," college monthly of the University of Alabama, contained some jokes of questionable propriety, the local postmaster barred it from the mails. The price immediately rose to $5 a copy.

While Wyoming was the pioneer woman's suffrage state, its legislature recently killed a bill making women eligible for jury service. Whether this action was taken out of solicitation for the ladies or for the prospective culprits was not stated.

George Vester skipped from Grand Rapids four years ago to avoid paying alimony. Recently forgetting the long reach of the radio, he requested WMC at Memphis to play "I Can't Give You Anything But Love." His wife heard the announcer tell who had asked for the number, and now George is going back to Grand Rapids to give love or whatever the judge thinks is right.

Frank Anderson of Tuckahoe, N. J., sat on the beach waving his arms frantically until sailors of the Coast Guard cutter a short distance off shore were attracted and came to his rescue. He had carelessly sat down on a concealed steel tray set for muskrats, and it held him fast.

If a couple of Idaho pack-mules could understand they might have a grand he-haw at modern methods of transportation. When automobiles and airplanes were unable to deliver 600 pounds of mail to a snow-bound settlement in the Salmon River region the mules were put into service and did the job.

Anthony Manguso of Kearny, N. J., persists in singing continually in spite of the fact that he has a big family of children to worry with. Upon complaint of neighbors, who declare that his warbling will not permit them to sleep, he has been put in a cage—a cell in the town jail—and now his fellow prisoners can't sleep.

The most expensive automobile in the world, recently displayed at the Cleveland show, cost $175,000, yet could not carry a single passenger. It was a miniature affair, built by a diamond firm, and contained 3,310 diamonds, 581 rubies and other precious stones.

The next time George Burgoyne, a Canadian trapper, kills a wolf he will be sure that it is "killed dead." Finding one in his trap recently he beat it apparently lifeless with a stick, slung it over his shoulder and started home. On the way the wolf came to and bit its captor severely before he could put it out of commission.

George Elliot of St. Paul was filled with great joy upon discovering that an old trunk he had bought for $2 at an auction contained 22 bottles of real pre-war liquor. But his joy was turned to grief when burglars broke into his home that night and carried away 20 of the bottles.

William Cullen Kemp, was considered an unpromising student when he entered Columbia at the age of 18. Relatives, so the story goes, offered to give him $2,500 for each year he remained in school. He never left until his death a few weeks ago after being a student continuously for 60 years, accumulating practically all the degrees in the category.

Land, bays, mountain peaks and the like never before seen by man have been discovered by Commander Byrd in the Antarctic, and named by him. Among these are a mountain range christened John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and a peak named for George Tennant, the expedition's faithful cook.

Mayor "Jimmie" Walker of New York excused himself from a meeting in which transit unification was being discussed, in order that he might perform a marriage ceremony for a couple of his friends. He wisecracked: "This is another unification job."

—Don't grope in the dark—don't look up and down the side streets—don't watch for red and yellow signs. The sensible, business-like, time-saving way to solve the tire question is to buy a good tire at the right price from a reputable, established dealer.

—Buy GOODYEARS. They're the best tires on the market. We sell them. Prices are right.

VOLUME II FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1929 NUMBER 32

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Fugitive: "Quick! The police are after me. Where can I find a place to hide?"
Office Manager: "Jump into the filing cabinet. No one can ever find anything there."

Contractor: "Who writes the advertisements for the bank?"
Dealer: "I don't know, but I'm sure it isn't the same man that makes the loans."

Own your own home. Build Now!—Build with wood.

Hubby: "I wish I had one of those crisp rolls that mother used to make."
Wife: "Yes, and I wish you had a few crisp rolls such as father used to put in the bank."

He was showing her through the locomotive works.
"What's that big thing over there?" said she.
"That's a locomotive boiler."
"Why do they boil the locomotive?"
"To make the locomotive tender," he replied.

There's a reason why "ABERDEEN" satisfies. Try it.

See Our Stuff.

Wife (reproachfully): "You're kinder to dumb animals than you are to me."
Husband (fed-up): "Well, you try being dumb and see how kind I'll be."

Our Own Vaudeville Smith: "You say you're a bigamist?"
Brown: "Yes. My wife is too many women for one man."

"Do you think the moon affects the tide?"
"Not so much as it does the untied."

The Sweet Young Thing: "Is this the weather bureau?"
W. B. Man: "Yes, what can I do for you?"

S. Y. T.: "How about a shower tonight?"
W. B. Man: "It's all right with me. If you need it, take it."
